Valencia is a long-standing MotoGP circuit located near the coast in the driest part of Spain. It's a great track to ride and it benefits from 3 important advantages as compared to most other circuits...

Firstly, it doesn't eat tyres; which saves you literally hundreds of Pounds! Tyre wear is typically less than half of the wear you would encounter at most other European circuits – so at Valencia it is possible to do 3 days on 1 rear tyre, which is pretty-much unheard of these days.

Secondly, Valencia's left-handed layout makes it unusual and interesting to ride. Thirdly, Valencia is located in the southeast corner of Spain, which is the driest area in Europe so it offers the best chance of dry weather – this is why the last GP of the year is always at Valencia. Typical weather conditions in March are predominantly sunny & bright with an average of 7 hours sunshine per day and average daily temperatures in the 15 to 20 degrees range, which is ideal for riding bikes.

And there are lots of direct flights from the UK to Valencia, so getting there is easy too!

CIRCUIT INFO: If you follow MotoGP or World Superbikes you'll have seen this circuit on TV many times. The circuit is 4km long and 12m wide with a 876m long main straight and 14 turns (9 left & 5 right). For more info (including a virtual lap that allows you to "walk the circuit") check out the circuit's website:
